Work related hearing loss covers many different hearing disorders such as tinnitus, acoustic shock or sonic shock and even deafness. Industrial deafness is a condition which is associated with excessive noise in the workplace and is triggered by prolonged exposure to excessive levels of noise. This can result in partial or total deafness and/or tinnitus. Tens of thousands of people in the UK suffer from noise induced hearing loss as a result of their working environment, which could be a factory, construction site, quarry, mine or any other excessively noisy environment.

If you have been exposed to prolonged periods of loud noise and have developed industrial deafness, then you may be entitled to make a claim for compensation for your hearing loss or injury. Why not speak to our solicitor today for a professional and friendly advice on:
